

Rejection Log

WORKSHEET | SKILL: MINDSET | DIFFICULTY: BEGINNER | EST. 8 MIN

Overview

A simple log that turns rejections into data: what happened, what you said, how they responded, and one neutral lesson - so a hard call becomes something you can learn from.

Learning objectives

- Record rejections without self-criticism
- Separate what happened from what it means
- Extract one neutral lesson per entry
- Spot patterns across a week

How to use it

After a rejection, jot a short, factual entry. Keep the lesson neutral and behaviour-focused ("my opener was vague") rather than personal ("I am bad at this"). Review the log weekly to spot patterns.

Log

Date	What happened	What I said	Their response	Neutral lesson	Next test
2026-07-19	Hung up after opener	Long intro, no question	Not interested	Opener was too long	Cut to one reason + question

Professional standard

Professional resilience treats rejection as information about fit, timing, message, or context - not as a verdict on personal worth. Reflection should be specific, private, and directed toward a controllable next action.

Professional workflow

1. Complete one real practice example before adding multiple rows. This reveals unclear fields and prevents the worksheet from becoming busywork.

2. Use observable facts and your own behaviour rather than assumptions about a prospect, interviewer, or colleague. Leave a field blank when you do not know.
3. Write short, decision-ready notes: what happened, what it means, and the next action. Avoid long diary entries that are difficult to review.
4. Review the completed sheet on a fixed cadence and choose one improvement priority. Do not change several behaviours at once.
5. Store only business-appropriate information and remove personal identifiers that are not required for learning or planning.

Quality-control review

Review point	Professional standard	Warning sign
Accuracy	The log separates what happened from the story you told yourself.	A single rejection becomes a broad claim about ability.
Privacy	Only general outcomes and your own actions are recorded.	Names, numbers, or unnecessary personal details are stored.
Reflection	One lesson is connected to observable evidence.	The review becomes self-criticism without a testable insight.
Recovery	A small next action is selected before returning to work.	The plan demands an unrealistic emotional reset or more volume.

Evidence and improvement signals

- Review patterns across several attempts rather than reacting to one outcome.
- Track recovery habits and process consistency alongside results.
- Notice whether the same message issue appears across different accounts.
- Escalate persistent distress to a trusted person; a worksheet is not a substitute for professional support.

Worked example (reframe)

Instead of "I am terrible at cold calls," write: "My opener ran 40 seconds before I asked anything. Next test: reason plus question in under 15 seconds." Same call, but now it points to a specific, fixable behaviour.

Safe-practice note

Record only your own actions and general outcomes - no prospect names, numbers, or private details. This log is a learning tool, not a place to store personal data or to punish yourself.
