Cheat Sheet - Skill: communication - Difficulty: beginner - Est. 5 min

Draft resource pending human editorial review - not yet professionally verified.

A short guide to how you sound on a call - pace, warmth, and confidence - with simple adjustments you can practice, because tone often matters more than the exact words.

Learning objectives

- Slow your pace at the start of a call
- Sound warm and calm rather than rushed
- Use a curious tone for questions
- Notice and reset your tone when nerves rise

Adjustments

If you tend to...

Talk fast when nervous

Sound flat or scripted

Rise in pitch on questions

Fill silence quickly

Try this

Pause a full second after your opener.

Smile before you speak; it changes your voice.

Let questions land softly and then stay quiet.

Count to two after asking; let them answer.

Practice ideas

- Record yourself reading your opener and listen back once.
- Practice one call standing up to steady your breathing.
- Pick one tonality goal per call block, not five.

Worked example

Goal for today: "Pause after my opening question." On call three you catch yourself rushing, take a breath, and slow the next sentence. That single reset is the whole exercise - one adjustment, practised repeatedly.

Safe-practice note

Tonality is about being clear and human, not about manipulating emotions. Do not use fake urgency or pressure in your voice. Practice tone with recordings or the AI Coach, not by experimenting on unsuspecting prospects.
