

Reconnect a Dormant Lead

Script - Skill: follow-up - Difficulty: intermediate - Est. 8 min

A call for reaching someone who went quiet months ago - it references the past honestly, gives them an easy way to say the timing changed, and never guilt-trips them for going dark.

Learning objectives

- Reference the earlier conversation accurately
- Give a real reason you are reaching out now
- Make it easy to restart or to close the loop
- Avoid any guilt about the silence

How to reopen

1. Remind them who you are and when you last spoke.
2. Name what changed that makes now worth a call - a new feature, a trigger event, a promised follow-up.
3. Offer a genuine choice: pick this back up, or close it out for now.
4. Whatever they choose, thank them and respect it.

Reasons that justify a reconnect

- You said you would circle back at a specific time, and that time is now.
- Something changed on their side (funding, hiring, a launch).
- Something changed on your side that directly addresses what they cared about.

Worked example

"Hi Priya, Sam from Northlight - we spoke back in the spring about weekend support coverage, and you asked me to check back once your headcount plan was set. I saw you are hiring again, so this felt like the right time. Totally fine if the priority has shifted - do you want to pick this up, or should I close it out for now?"

Safe-practice note

Never guilt someone for going quiet ("I never heard back from you...") - silence is a normal, acceptable answer. Only claim a promised follow-up if it genuinely happened. Give a clean way to end the thread, and take a second no as final.
