Overview

A short voicemail structure - under twenty seconds - that gives a real reason to call back without hype, false urgency, or a mystery you refuse to explain.

Learning objectives

- Leave a voicemail the prospect can act on
- State a specific, honest reason for the call
- Make the callback easy with a clear number
- Avoid pressure tactics that damage trust

Say it in this order

1. Your name and company, spoken slowly.
2. One honest sentence about why you called this person.
3. What a callback would cover, so it is not a mystery.
4. Your number, said twice and clearly, then a short thank you.

What to avoid

Tempting line

"Call me back urgently."

Why to drop it

Fake urgency reads as a trick and erodes trust.

"I have something important for you."

A withheld mystery feels manipulative, not intriguing.

"You will want to hear this."

You are deciding for them what they want.

Professional standard

A professional opening removes uncertainty quickly: the listener knows who is calling, why the call may be relevant, and that they can decline. The purpose is not to force attention; it is to earn enough trust for one useful question.

Professional workflow

1. Research the account and role before editing the script. Record one observable business signal, one plausible problem to test, and the source that supports the signal.
2. Replace every bracketed placeholder with plain language you would genuinely use. Remove claims, customer names, statistics, and urgency that you cannot verify.
3. Read the script aloud at normal speed. Shorten any sentence that forces you to rush, breathe in the middle, or sound as if you are reading.
4. Practise three variations: the intended flow, an early interruption, and a clear no. The goal is calm adaptation, not perfect memorisation.
5. After use, record only the outcome category and one learning point. Adjust one line at a time so you know which change improved clarity or relevance.

Quality-control review

Review point	Professional standard	Warning sign
Clarity	Identity and purpose are understandable on the first listen.	The listener must ask who you are or why you called.
Relevance	The reason is tied to a verified business signal or role-level problem.	The opener relies on a generic claim that could apply to anyone.
Brevity	The opening reaches a genuine question in roughly 20-35 seconds.	A product explanation begins before the listener has responded.
Control	The listener has an honest, easy way to continue or end the call.	Permission language is used but a no is ignored.

Evidence and improvement signals

- Track how often the listener understands the reason for the call without asking for clarification.
- Review whether the first response is a real answer, a request for context, a timing objection, or a firm no.
- Listen for rushed delivery, filler words, and sentences that are too long to say naturally.
- Improve the relevance line before changing tone or adding more words.

Worked example

"Hi Jordan, this is Sam with Northlight - that is S-A-M. I called because I saw your team is hiring support reps, and weekend coverage is usually where things get tight when you scale. If it is worth a short conversation I can walk you through how two similar teams handled it - no pressure either way. My number is 555-0142, again 555-0142. Thanks Jordan."

Safe-practice note

One voicemail per attempt is plenty - stacking messages feels like pressure. Never imply a prior conversation that did not happen, and never leave a deliberately vague message designed to force a callback. If they never call back, that is an answer too.
