

Permission-Based Cold Call Opener

SCRIPT | SKILL: OPENING | DIFFICULTY: BEGINNER | EST. 6 MIN

Overview

A short, honest opener that asks for a few seconds of attention before you explain why you called, so the conversation starts with consent instead of a pitch.

Learning objectives

- Introduce yourself and your company clearly
- Ask permission before continuing
- Give a specific, honest reason for the call
- End with one open question that invites a real answer

How to use it

1. Read the four beats out loud until they feel natural: identity, permission, reason, question.
2. Replace the bracketed placeholders with your own company and a real, specific reason for calling.
3. Practice the opener five times before your first live call of the day.
4. If the prospect says now is not a good time, offer to be brief or to call back - do not push past a clear no.

The four beats

- Identity: "Hi [name], this is [you] with [company]."
- Permission: "Can I borrow 30 seconds to tell you why I called, and then you can decide if it is worth continuing?"
- Reason: one specific, honest sentence about why you are calling this person.
- Question: an open question that lets them react in their own words.

Professional standard

A professional opening removes uncertainty quickly: the listener knows who is calling, why the call may be relevant, and that they can decline. The purpose is not to force attention; it is to earn enough trust for one useful question.

Professional workflow

1. Research the account and role before editing the script. Record one observable business signal, one plausible problem to test, and the source that supports the signal.
2. Replace every bracketed placeholder with plain language you would genuinely use. Remove claims, customer names, statistics, and urgency that you cannot verify.
3. Read the script aloud at normal speed. Shorten any sentence that forces you to rush, breathe in the middle, or sound as if you are reading.
4. Practise three variations: the intended flow, an early interruption, and a clear no. The goal is calm adaptation, not perfect memorisation.
5. After use, record only the outcome category and one learning point. Adjust one line at a time so you know which change improved clarity or relevance.

Quality-control review

Review point	Professional standard	Warning sign
Clarity	Identity and purpose are understandable on the first listen.	The listener must ask who you are or why you called.
Relevance	The reason is tied to a verified business signal or role-level problem.	The opener relies on a generic claim that could apply to anyone.
Brevity	The opening reaches a genuine question in roughly 20-35 seconds.	A product explanation begins before the listener has responded.
Control	The listener has an honest, easy way to continue or end the call.	Permission language is used but a no is ignored.

Evidence and improvement signals

- Track how often the listener understands the reason for the call without asking for clarification.
- Review whether the first response is a real answer, a request for context, a timing objection, or a firm no.
- Listen for rushed delivery, filler words, and sentences that are too long to say naturally.
- Improve the relevance line before changing tone or adding more words.

Worked example

"Hi Jordan, this is Sam with Northlight. Can I borrow 30 seconds to tell you why I called, and then you can decide if it is worth continuing? ... Thanks. I work with operations leads at mid-size logistics firms, and most tell me onboarding new drivers still runs on spreadsheets. Before I assume that is true for you - how are you handling that today?"

Safe-practice note

Never claim a referral, prior meeting, or relationship that did not happen. If the prospect says it is a bad time, respect it and offer to reconnect. Rehearse with the AI Coach, not with real prospects you have not researched.
