

30-Second Call Structure

Script - Skill: opening - Difficulty: intermediate - Est. 8 min

Draft resource pending human editorial review - not yet professionally verified.

A flexible spoken structure - not a word-for-word script - that keeps your first 30 seconds clear: who you are, why you are calling, why it might matter to them, and one question.

Learning objectives

- Deliver identity, reason, relevance, and a question in about 30 seconds
- Sound like a structure you can adapt, not a memorised paragraph
- Lead with a buyer problem instead of a product feature
- Hand the conversation back with a genuine question

Build your version

1. Write one sentence of identity: your name and company.
2. Write one honest reason you are calling this type of person.
3. Write one relevance line: a problem people in this role often recognise.
4. Write one open question that checks whether the problem is real for them.
5. Read all four aloud and time yourself - aim for 25 to 35 seconds.

Structure at a glance

Beat	Goal	Length
Identity	Remove confusion about who is calling	~4 sec
Reason	Be honest about why you called	~6 sec
Relevance	Connect to a problem they may have	~10 sec
Question	Give control back to the prospect	~6 sec

Worked example

"Hi Priya, Sam from Northlight. I called because we help support teams that are getting more tickets than they can answer without adding headcount. Support leads often tell me weekend coverage is where things slip. Is that something your team runs into, or have you already solved it?"

Safe-practice note

Use a structure you can adapt in the moment rather than reciting a script; robotic delivery breaks trust. Do not invent statistics or results. If they answer that the problem does not apply, believe them and move on.

Last reviewed: 2026-07-19 - AmplifyHub Practical Resource Library